Qlik Technologies Inc. Research Report

On July 24, 2013, Qlik Technologies, Inc. (QlikTech) announced that the QlikView Academic Program has awarded nearly 100 grants in 35 countries since its launch in 2012. QlikTech stated that its QlikView Academic Program is part of the Company's global CSR Program and it allows any accredited, university-level institution for free licenses of the QlikView Business Discovery platform to use within its educational curricula. "Because of the QlikView Academic Program, instead of using textbooks, our students are getting real industry experience with Big Data tools to learn about a wide variety of industries such as transportation, beverage, and retail," said Keith Carter, former Executive Director Global Supply Chain Intelligence at Estee Lauder Companies. "As a result, students preparing for careers are gaining strong analytical skills, and learning how they can leverage data to make better business decisions. Knowing how to use a groundbreaking tool like QlikView lets them show their future bosses what's possible."
